predictions. to test the concept at hypersonic flow enthalpies and temperatures, a high temperature ni-based inconel / sodium system was designed, fabricated, and tested. while there was a significant reduction in maximum temperature over an identical system containing no working fluid, isothermal operation was not observed. it is hypothesized that making fast even faster: the use of ultra-high temperature ... - a coating on hypersonic vehicles. ultra-high temperature ceramics ultra-high temperature ceramics (uhtcs) are a prime candidate for hypersonic flight because they meet the thermal requirements and are easily moldable. due to their unique manufacturing process of sintering (hot pressing powdered uhtc into a mold), uhtcs can be shaped for a more ... an evaluation of high temperature airframe seals for ... - high temperature seals are required for advanced hypersonic airframe applications. in this study, both spring tube thermal barriers and innovative wafer seal systems were evaluated under relevant hypersonic test conditions (temperatures, pressures, etc.) via high temperature compression testing and room temperature flow assessments. materials architectures and characterization for ... - extend the art of the possible for future hypersonic systems new metals and ceramics • examples include high entropy materials, ceramic and metal composites • very large compositional spaces to search new coatings • better oxidation barriers (particularly >1600°c) • intelligent coating -
